Fit for Safety

Many of us make the infamous New Year's resolution of beginning an exercise program. There are many motivations for maintaining physical fitness but did you know daily exercise can be a key element to prevent accidents and reduce injuries. Yes, exercise will improve your ability to work safely by improving alertness that allows you to think clearly and improves your agility which reduces strains and sprains.

Physical fitness means having the strength, endurance and flexibility to deal with the things we encounter in our lives each day. It involves keeping our heart and lungs functioning well so they can supply us with the oxygen we need. Maintaining muscular strength can help us to prevent injuries. Maintaining fitness can increase energy and endurance to allow us to remain alert to possible dangers on the job.

Even if you work at a physically demanding job, it is important to have a regular exercise program. Even a job involving tasks such as heavy lifting or walking will not provide all of the right kinds of exercises to maintain good fitness.

Probably the last thing you want to do at the end of a day's work is to work some more ~ in the form of exercise. But in the long run it can help you to work better and even more safely. It can be a real trick to fit exercise into a schedule which is already too busy. But it can be done.

Alternatives to a gym membership or maintaining a grueling exercise routine:

- Walk or bicycle to or from work or to the place where you catch your bus or carpool.
- Make a habit of taking the stairs as often as possible.
- Do stretching exercises right at your work station before your shift and during breaks.
- While you're out shopping, park farther away from the door. (there are plenty of spots and no door dings)
- Make exercise part of your social and family life by having some active fun with friends and family.

KUBLY'S KORNER

Article provided by BOE Safe School Manager, Josh Kubly

Cyberbullying (Internet Safety)

Studies of internet-using adolescents indicate that 53% (approximately 13 million) have been the targets of cyberbullying and more than 15% (approximately 4 million) have bullied others online. For some of these youth, online cruelty may be a precursor to more destructive behavior, including involvement in hate groups and bias-related violence. Cyber-bullying has been defined as "when the Internet, cell phones or other devices are used to send or post text or images intended to hurt or embarrass another person", or as "when an electronic device is used to attack or defame the character of a real person. Often embarrassing or false information about the victim is posted in an online forum where the victim and those who know the victim can see it publicly." Cyber-bullying can be as simple as continuing to send e-mail to someone who has said they want no further contact with the sender, but it may also include threats, sexual remarks, hate speech, ganging up on victims by making them the subject of ridicule in forums, and posting false statements as fact aimed at humiliation.

Cyber-bullies may disclose victims' personal data (e.g. real name, address, or workplace/schools) at websites or forums or may pose as the identity of a victim for the purpose of publishing material in their name that defames or ridicules them. Some cyber-bullies may also send threatening and harassing emails and instant messages to the victims, while other post rumors or gossip and instigate others to dislike and gang up on the target.

Kids report being mean to each other online beginning as young as 2nd grade. According to research, boys initiate mean online activity earlier than girls do. However, by middle school, girls are more likely to engage in cyber-bullying than boys. Whether the bully is male or female, their purpose is to intentionally embarrass others, harass, intimidate, or make threats online to one another. Though the use of sexual remarks and threats are sometimes present in cyber-bullying, it is not the same as sexual harassment and does not necessarily involve sexual predators.

Parents should discuss the following techniques with their children:

- Don't give out private information such as passwords, pins, name, address, phone number, school name, or family and friends' names. This information can be used by bullies and other harmful people on the Internet. Don't even reveal your password to your friends. They might reveal it or use it against you in a fight.
- Don't exchange pictures or give out e-mail addresses to people you meet on the Internet. Ask permission from parents when it is necessary to give such information.
- Don't send a message when you are angry—it's hard to undo things that are said in anger.
- Delete messages from people you don't know, or those from people who seem angry or mean.
- When something doesn't seem right, it probably isn't. Get out of the site, chat, etc.
- Realize that online conversations are not private. Others can copy, print, and share what you say or any pictures

We should only have up to 2 grams of trans fat a day. But if there is less than half a gram in a serving, the product can still be labeled trans fat free. If we eat two servings and aren't paying attention, we'd consume half of the day's allowance while thinking we're at 0 grams!!
